“ When a tragic event occurs it is natural - for me at least - to reflect upon the past. The past I speak of involves so many facets of Jason Traxler.

I was in my early 20s when he was born. Yes, he was handsome, and adored, and coddled, and loved by many. My Uncle Billy and Aunt Debbie were infatuated - their Toot was amazing. There were other family members just as in awe of Jason - some relationships I witnessed, such as the one between our shared grandmother Mildred Traxler and Jason, some I didn't, but I always heard about the special connections each had with Jason.

As a cousin to Jason, we spent a lot of time together at family gatherings. It was always so easy picking up where we left off. The time spent apart didn't matter. Throughout the years and many miles of separation our visits grew less frequent, but we stayed in touch. He was never, ever, ever more than a phone call away. And when the connection was made I could feel him close by, not miles away. I could always feel he loved me, he loved us all.

Could I have changed an event that led to our tragic loss of such a good, good man? Could you? Those answers will be revealed in time; God's time, not ours. Even though every one of us would surely like to have the time back prior to Jason's death, but we don't have that as an option. Instead, reach out to another, find a way to love, forgive any wrongs, reunite with loved ones. We can all be witness to the fact that tomorrow is not guaranteed.

To all of Jason's friends - you know without a doubt he loved you all. For Jason's family, which is basically everyone he ever knew, never allow the events of the past few days, nor the scant few to come, to define your love for Jason nor his love for you - he loved deeply and would ask that you do the same.

Rest peacefully, Jason "Toot" Traxler, I'll hold you in my heart forever and always.
